“ She is a great grandmother to me only one who believed in me. I love and miss you grandma always in my heart forever missed. One of the only people tolerated my youth

“ Lucia strived to make happiness and, to me, epitomized the Alice Mackenzie Swaim poem “Courage is not the towering oak that sees storms come and go; it is the fragile blossom that opens in the snow.”
? I recently last saw Lucia pausing at our street tree as she gathered strength to continue walking around our block without a cane... ... She tackled the hardest of life with perseverance, fervor and zest. I saw her pause and gather strength.. then she moved on with her mind steadfast to finish her task at hand. This is the way I will remember Lucia. I hope she finds a grand happiness in Heaven and certainly her lost baby son with leap with joy to see his Mama again.
